

P.S. Most people do not realize our son is deaf. I believe many more children could talk better if both signing and speech were encouraged. I still think the oral communication at first was the best way to do things. We didn't decide against signing at school first. Sometimes one who has been there can be heard better anyway. Please pass my name along

When he was seven he went to public school, still in a special class with signing for his language and spelling and speech. Today he is in a regular classroom. He is twelve years old and he knows some signs but mainly depends on lip reading and his hearing aid. He wears a E-22 P Oticon.
